Search, Cite, and More in the Research + Tools space.

Find relevant information and sources, plus easily cite them as you go. To read more from a source, click "Pull Source" and then expand the article using the "Read more" feature.

If you see a quote or other piece of information you'd like to use, highlight and right-click for it to be inserted and cited into your working draft in the Editor window. Clicking on the title of the URL will open a new tab where you can review the entire web page or article.

Bookmark and Plan

When you save a source using the "Bookmark" feature in the top right corner, you can revisit it later in your Notebook tab.

By now, we all know that Women's History Month is in March of every year, but how and why did it come to be? Celebrating remarkable women and their contributions may seem like a no-brainer, but it wasn't always so.

According to womenshistory.org, it actually started as Women's History Week in 1978 after the Sonoma County Commission on the Status of Women wanted an overlapping, more thorough celebration that spanned over International Women's Day.

Once the movement caught steam in other parts of California, and the country as a whole, it was made a national week of celebration in 1980 before becoming the month-long Women's History Month we know today in 1987 (National Women's History Museum)
National Women's History Month

Women's History Month started out of Women's History Week in 1978. It was originally intended to be a week-long celebration that spanned International Women's Day.
